

What is the relationship between bodies and citizens?

I think the relationship between bodies and citizens is power in numbers. In this case bodies refers to the number of people involved. If the citizens, who are in a large group, want something they are more likely to get it if there is a whole group of them. A group of people who are fighting for the same cause is more powerful and noticeable than a few people. Also if the group is spread out through many states or areas, there is more power to get things done because there are more voices to echo.

I think it is important for citizens anywhere to find a group that share the same beliefs. In this case they have a better chance making small changes even if it is just in their town - power in numbers. If it is noticed that groups throughout the country are unhappy, if it is possible there is a better chance that something will be done to prevent further agitation.
